— The area where the remnant of Edo era's culture can still be seen —

5 Arakicho

During the Edo period (1603-1868), Arakicho was where feudal lord Matsudaira Setsunokami's residence was located. Its picturesque garden, completed with waterfall, was known during the Meiji period (1868-1912) as "Edo's Hakone" (Edo is the old name for Tokyo, and Hakone is a tourist spot in the mountains). From the Taisho period (1912-1926) to the middle of Showa period (1926-1989), it was very active as an atmospheric pleasure district. Even now, its nostalgic atmosphere and plentiful small eateries and bars, not to mention its hilly roads lined with buildings, makes it a pleasant place to visit.

DATA

- 10 minutes on foot from Akebonobashi station (Metro).
- 5 minutes on foot from Yotsuya-sanchome station (Metro)

6 Shinmichi-dori

Walking from the Yotsuya-mitsuke intersection towards Shinjuku, a sign "Shinmichi-dori" can be seen on your right. This sign marks the start of a dining and drinking area that runs parallel with Shinjuku-dori. Narrow alleys filled with popular bars, pubs and traditional cuisine restaurants.

DATA

- 2 minutes on foot from Yotsuya station (JR/Metro lines)

7 Yotsuya-Mitsuke-Bridge

Completed in 1913, Yotsuya-Mitsuke-bridge was the first overpass to be completed in Tokyo. As a bridge leading to Akasaka Palace ("The State Guesthouse") it was designed in classic French style to be in harmony with the surrounding scenery. It was reconstructed in 1991, however it retained the style of the original's railing and lights. Its original handrails are now on display in front of the Shinjuku Historical Museum.

DATA

8 Japan Olympic Museum

In addition to exhibits and images that teach about the history of past Olympic Games as well as the Olympic Spirit, there is an Olympic Cauldron monument (replica) and even a corner where visitors can try to match their physical abilities to those of Olympians. Near the museum, there is Japan National Stadium (10-1, Kasumigaoka-machi, Shinjuku-ku) which was the main stadium of Olympic Games.

3 Suga-jinja Shrine

The magnificent Suga-jinja Shrine was originally built to house Yotsuya's guardian deity. A set of paintings of the Thirty-six Poetry Immortals (completed in 1836) was donated to the shrine, and these have been specified as tangible cultural properties of Shinjuku. A large festival is held every June, during which Yotsuya comes alive with the sound of mikoshi (portable shrine bearers).
